

hey girls...

we're good for universities and colleges...

how Edinburgh Napier partnered with hey girls...

Hey Girls home pack service enabled students to have free access to period products delivered straight to their door through an online booking system on the Hey Girls website. We also have products on campus.

We are one of Scotland's leading universities, with more than 19,500 students studying across three campuses in Merchiston, Craiglockhart and Sighthill.

We have a collaborative relationship with Hey Girls, having our students take part in work placements creating design and product resources.

education sector

universities & colleges

home pack service

the need...

The university first partnered with Hey Girls in 2019, with the project diversifying to help meet the needs of students throughout the pandemic.

Edinburgh Napier University recognises the dangers period poverty poses to its students education and works closely with Hey Girls to make its campuses an inclusive place to live and learn.

the impact...

Period poverty prevents students from attending lectures vital to their degrees. Stocking free period products throughout campus washrooms and the introduction of home packs has ensured no student struggles through period poverty and helps make higher education accessible to all.

the products...

The university purchases a range of disposable and reusable products for use across the campus' - with students designing a free period product dispenser that is now placed in every washroom at the university!

"we're very grateful to the Scottish Government for providing funding to enable this initiative."

Jamie Pearson
Environmental Sustainability
Manager

from the team...

Edinburgh Napier University is one of our longest-serving partners and its amazing team fully understand the challenges students face in period poverty and the role universities can play in eradicating it.

Georgie Nicholson, Hey Girls

Want to get the period dignity conversation flowing?

Say hey to the team now:

b2b@heygirls.co.uk

say hey...

