

hey girls...

we're good for workplaces...

how Wates Construction partnered with hey girls...

Wates is one of the largest family owned construction companies in the UK with 50 construction sites and offices nation-wide.

Wates first made Hey Girls their preferred supplier for period products in April 2021. At this point all London sites had Hey Girls products stocked.

Wates then turned their attention to rolling out Hey Girls Nationally by August 2021.

business to business

period dignity at work

the need...

Wates were looking for a social enterprise to provide period products to their staff. They share the Hey Girls vision for a fairer world, where no-one should be forced to experience an undignified period, and everyone should have access to the products they need.

the impact...

The reaction has been amazing! It's less of a taboo in the work place and I have open conversations with men weekly about products. Even better, I've had so many women from across the business saying how proud they are to work for such an inclusive company who put the needs of women at the forefront of their agenda.

the products...

Wates purchased disposable pads and tampons, as well as reusable period cups. The Wates team hope to donate reusable products such as Hey Girls' pants and cups to schools and community centres across the capital.

"i've had so many people in the office praise hey girls"

from the team...

It is amazing to know our work is making a difference – there has always been a quiet struggle for women and people who have periods in the workplace. Knowing we are freeing people of that worry is such a great feeling.

Daisy Williams, Hey Girls

Want to get the period dignity conversation flowing?

Say hey to the team now:

b2b@heygirls.co.uk

say hey...

